

I am opposed to any further delay in allowing wireless consumers to keep their phone number when they transfer service providers. I am unhappy with my current wireless service provider and had hoped to change carriers last November once the portability rules went into effect. Because of my work, I would be adversely affected if I have to change wireless phone numbers. Any further delay will create an additional burden for me, and force me to continue receiving poor service. If the FCC is truly committed to competition and open markets, wireless phone numbers must be made portable without delay.
